

1 the indictment was unlawful in that the procedures used to impanel the Grand Jury routinely 2 excluded certain constitutionally cognizable groups in violation of the 14th Amendment of the 3 United States Constitution. He asserts that the grand jury pool was not drawn from a fair cross
4 section of the community as required by the 6th Amendment of the United States Constitution 5 and California statutory law applicable to grand jury selection. He avers that the criteria used to 6 qualify prospective grand jurors results in automatic exclusion of certain individuals in violation 7 of his right to equal protection and to due process.

8 The only issue before this court is process: the formation and composition of the grand 9 jury. Upon reciprocal agreement between Ventura County Superior Court and Santa Barbara 10 County Superior Court and through the Judicial Council, this matter was assigned to this court.
11 The assignment was “for purposes of the motion to dismiss (grand jury formation and 12 composition) only.” (Order on Assignment, November 28, 2001.) This court has not been asked 13 to consider the facts underlying the charged offenses, the evidence against Defendant, or any 14 other matter concerning the merits, and has not done so.

15 Defendant’s Motion to Dismiss is directed solely to the still pending charges and 16 allegations of the Indictment. Before filing this motion, Defendant Sanchez pled guilty to 61 17 felony counts in the Indictment, not including the homicide allegations at issue here. The 18 defendant has expressly waived any challenge as to the counts which have been the subject of 19 guilty or no contest plea. The parties are in agreement that the guilty plea to those 61 counts 20 waived the issue of the composition of the grand jury, as to those counts. Thus, the defense 21 agrees that the 61 guilty pleas already entered are valid and will remain unaffected, regardless of 22 the Court’s ruling with respect to the remaining charges contained in the Indictment.

23 The Court has considered Plaintiff’s Supplemental Opposition to his Motion to Dismiss 24 dated February 11, 2002 pursuant to Rule 11.03¹ of the Local Rules of the Ventura County 25

27 ¹ Rule 11.03, General Rules for Pretrial Motions in Criminal Cases, requires that pretrial 28 motions in criminal cases be noticed in writing and briefed, and states, “Where pertinent legal authority comes to counsel’s attention after the filing of his or her brief, a supplemental brief should be served and filed where time allows. Where supplemental briefing is not possible,

1 Superior Court, and over the objection of the Defendant. The defense objected to the plaintiff's
2 Supplemental Briefing, and argued that the People waived any challenge to the right to a fair 3 cross section by failing to contest it in their initial briefing and oral argument, and waived any 4 issue of need to demonstrate prejudice in the same manner. Plaintiff points out that neither party 5 briefed the issue of Legislative Intent in its initial papers, and refers to Rule 11.03 and to an 6 appellate rule, Government Code §68081, regarding supplemental briefing of issues that are 7 neither proposed nor briefed.

8 The applicability of Penal Code section 904.6 was not only proposed by the defense, but 9 was the cornerstone of the Defendant's motion to dismiss. The parties were given full 10 opportunity to respond to the Court's inquiries concerning whether there exists a right to a state
11 grand jury drawn from a fair cross section at the December 21, 2001 hearing. Citations
12 contained in Plaintiff's supplemental brief were not supplied to the court and opposing counsel 13 as far in advance of the hearing as possible as is required by Rule 11.03. The parties left to the 14 Court the initial task of surveying and analyzing the Legislative History behind section 904.6.
15 However, the Court has exercised its discretion to consider the supplemental authorities, due to 16 the significance of the legal issues presented.

17
18 Background

19 Grand juries serve three basic functions: "to weigh criminal charges and determine 20 whether indictments should be returned (Penal Code §917); to weigh allegations of misconduct 21 against public officials and determine whether to present formal accusations requesting their 22 removal from office (Penal Code § 922; see Gov. Code, § 3060 et seq.); and to act as the public's 23 'watchdog' by investigating and reporting upon the affairs of local government (e.g., §§ 919, 925 24 et seq.)." McClatchy Newspapers v. Superior Court (1988) 44 Cal.3d 1162, 1170.

25 All counties are required to impanel at least one grand jury every year. (Penal Code 26 §905). A regular grand jury is impaneled each year as provided in Penal Code section 896, et

27
28 citations should be supplied to the court and opposing counsel as far in advance of the hearing as

1 seq. (Referred to herein as an "896" or "regular" grand jury.) In addition, section 904.6
2 authorizes an additional criminal grand jury, which may serve for a shorter term. (A "904.6" or 3 "additional" grand jury.) Section 904.6 was amended in 1991 to be applicable to all counties.
4 Ventura County continues to have only a regular 896 grand jury, performing all three basic 5 functions and serving for a full year.

6 A 904.6 additional grand jury is impaneled much like a trial jury. The presiding judge 7 selects persons at random from the list of trial jurors in civil and criminal cases and determines if 8 they are competent to serve as grand jurors. (§904, subd. (c)) The presiding judge impanels the 9 additional criminal grand jury from time to time, as needed, and discharges them when no longer 10 needed. (§904.6(c)) Section 904.6 criminal grand jurors are therefore not required to commit to 11 a full year of service. Service on the additional grand jury is obligatory, not voluntary. All 12 persons "have an obligation to serve, when summoned for that purpose." (§904.6(e)) The result 13 of compulsory service and random selection ensures that the pool will represent a fair cross 14 section of the community. If impaneled, the additional grand jury has exclusive jurisdiction to 15 return indictments, except for matters that the regular grand jury had been inquiring into at the 16 time of empanelment.

17 A regular grand jury constituted under section 896, which is the only grand jury utilized 18 in Ventura, is selected in a sharply different manner. The superior court judges select the grand 19 jury after interview from a list that is composed by the jury commissioner. (§§896, and 903.1) 20 The jury commissioner creates this list by diligently inquiring and informing herself in respect to 21 the qualifications of residents of the county. (§903.2) This is done pursuant to rules or 22 instructions adopted by a majority of the superior court judges for the county. In Ventura, 23 residents are included on the list only if they apply and volunteer to serve for a full year, five 24 days a week. This results in a greatly restricted and non-representative pool.

25 The grand jury list in Ventura represents only a small segment of the county's jury 26 eligible population. Ventura Grand Jury Commissioner Peggy Yost testified that she has been

27
28 possible.”

1 responsible for compiling the grand jury lists for the last two years, 2000-2001 and 2001-2002
2 (in which defendant Sanchez was indicted). She has done so using procedures approved by the 3 presiding judge and also in effect prior to 2000. The system requires voluntary application. (RT 4 12:10-13) A person may be nominated by a judge, but will still be required to fill out an 5 application which requires a waiver of confidential information and a notice that they will be 6 investigated. (She testified that the investigations are background checks, and are no longer
7 performed by the district attorney's office. This information is not explained on the application, 8 however.)

9 In the year 2000, Ventura had a population of 538,953 over the age of 18. (Table 1 to 10 Declaration of Dr. Weeks, most recent Census data.) Ms. Yost testified that in typical years only 11 100 of Ventura's residents apply to serve as grand jurors. Even this number is down sharply in 12 recent years. Last year she had fewer than 40 residents apply to serve, (RT 14:2-6), and 13 believed only 10 were female. (RT 23:9-10)

14 Ms. Yost testified that for the last two years, Ventura was unable to comply with the 15 requirement of Penal Code section 899 to have a proportionate representation on the master 16 grand jury list from each supervisorial district. (RT (1-6, 18-23) Ms. Yost and Defendant's 17 expert, Dr. Weeks, both offered evidence that, based on the population within the five 18 supervisorial districts in Ventura County, the Court had determined that each group of 30 19 nominees should include 6 persons from each district. The court maintained that pattern through 20 1999-2000, but was unable to do so in 2000-2001 and 2001-2002. (Testimony of Ms. Yost, RT 21 12/13/01, Supplemental Dec. of Dr. Weeks, ¶¶7 and 8, Table 2.) From Supervisorial District 5, 22 which includes the City of Oxnard and which has the largest concentration of Hispanics, there 23 were only two applicants in each of those years. (Id.) (RT 9:25-26). Ventura did not use 24 summons to correct the deficiency or to compose the master list.

25 Based on this volunteer system, there were only 40 members of the grand jury pool for 26 2001-2002, the year in which defendant Sanchez was indicted. Comparing this to the most 27 recent Census data for 2000, the pool represented only .0000742 of the population over age 18.
28

1 Although the District Attorney’s office has asked the Ventura Superior Court to adopt a 2 904.6 grand jury system, it has apparently refused to do so. The prosecutor stated at oral 3 argument, "We requested several years ago that the Court do it [impanel a 904.6 additional grand 4 jury], and the Court has declined to do so. I think we can – it seems that a system like that would 5 have certain advantages." (RT 56:12-16)

7 Constitutional Framework

8 The 5th Amendment to the United States Constitution guarantees in criminal prosecutions 9 a right to due process. (No person shall “be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due 10 process of law.”) The due process clause of the 5th Amendment is applicable to the State courts 11 through the 14th Amendment, which provides at Section 1, “nor shall any State deprive any 12 person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its 13 jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.”

14 The 6th Amendment to the United States Constitution guarantees “In all (federal) criminal 15 prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury.” 16 This clause has been interpreted to require a trial jury drawn from a fair cross section of the 17 community. The 6th Amendment right to trial by impartial jury is applicable to the States 18 through the due process clause of the 14th Amendment. Duncan v. Louisiana (1968) 391 U.S.
19 145. Therefore, state court trial (“petit”) juries must be drawn from a fair cross section of the 20 community in order to satisfy the Sixth Amendment constitutional requirements.

21 State court grand juries, on the other hand, are not bound by federal cross section 22 requirements, but only by equal protection guarantees embodied in the 14th Amendment, United 23 States ex rel Barksdale v. Blackburn (1980) 610 F.2d 253, and any guarantee that may be 24 provided by state law. The 5th Amendment to the United States Constitution also guarantees, in 25 the case of a capital offense, presentment or indictment by Grand Jury. (“No person shall be 26 held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment 27
28

1 of a Grand Jury.”) However, the grand jury clause of the 5th Amendment is not applicable to the 2 states. People v. Hurtado (1883) 63 Cal. 288.²

3 Article I, Section 16, of the California Constitution secures the right to jury trial, but does 4 not speak to grand juries.³ Article I, Section 23, (“Grand Jury”) of the California Constitution, 5 provides simply that “Sec. 23. One or more grand juries shall be drawn and summoned at least 6 once a year in each county.”

7 Defendant’s purposeful discrimination and fair cross section challenges are independent 8 of each other and will be considered in turn.

10 I. Purposeful Discrimination

11 Source of Protection: 14th Amendment

12 The 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution provides, “nor shall any State 13 deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any 14 person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.” It has been interpreted to 15 prohibit purposeful exclusion of any recognizable distinct class from serving as trial (“petit”) 16 jurors or grand jurors. Pierre v. Louisiana (1939) 306 U.S. 354. Hispanics are a distinct class, 17 protected by the 14th Amendment from discriminatory jury exclusion. People v. Ramos (1997)

18
19 ² “Unlike the jury trial clause of the Sixth Amendment, the grand jury clause of the Fifth 20 Amendment has not been incorporated into the Fourteenth Amendment.” I Beale, Grand Jury 21 Law & Practice, §3.12, citing People v. Hurtado (1883) 63 Cal. 288 (overruled by statute on 22 other grounds concerning non-statutory voluntary manslaughter as discussed in People v Spurlin
23 (1984) 156 Cal.App.3d 119.

24 ³ It provides in full: “Trial by jury is an inviolate right and shall be secured to all, but in a civil 25 cause three-fourths of the jury may render a verdict. A jury may be waived in a criminal cause by 26 the consent of both parties expressed in open court by the defendant and the defendant's counsel.
27 In a civil cause a jury may be waived by the consent of the parties expressed as prescribed by 28 statute. In civil causes the jury shall consist of 12 persons or a lesser number agreed on by the parties in open court. In civil causes other than causes within the appellate jurisdiction of the court of appeal the Legislature may provide that the jury shall consist of eight persons or a lesser number agreed on by the parties in open court. In criminal actions in which a felony is charged, the jury shall consist of 12 persons. In criminal actions in which a misdemeanor is charged, the jury shall consist of 12 persons or a lesser number agreed on by the parties in open court.” Cal.

1 15 Cal.4th 1134, 1154. Women are also a protected, distinct class. Taylor v. Louisiana (1975)
2 419 U.S. 522, 531-532. Young people have not been recognized as a distinct class, although the 3 question has been left open by the California Supreme Court. People v Stansbury (1993) 4 4 Cal.4th 1017, 1061.

5 Legal Standard – 14th Amendment Guarantee

6 A defendant raising a 14th Amendment challenge to a jury on the grounds of purposeful 7 discrimination against a distinct class must make a prima facie showing that (1) “over a 8 significant period of time”; (2) there has been a “substantial underrepresentation”; (3) of a 9 “recognizable distinct class, singled out for different treatment under the laws.” Castaneda v.
10 Partida (1977) 430 U.S. 482.

11 The government may rebut this showing by proving either that (1) No discriminatory 12 purpose was involved, or (2) Even if such purpose was involved, it did not have a determinative 13 effect. Duren v. Missouri (1979) 439 U.S. 357, 368 n. 26. The government’s rebuttal burden has 14 also been described as follows: To establish the use of objective, racially neutral selection 15 procedures, or, to show that “permissible racially neutral selection criteria and procedures have 16 produced the monochromatic result.” Castaneda v. Partida (1977) 430 U.S. 482, 494-495.

17 Discriminatory purpose is an essential element of violation of the 14th Amendment’s 18 equal protection clause. Arlington Heights vs Metropolitan House. Dev. Corp. (1977) 429 U.S.
19 252, 264-265. Discriminatory purpose may be established by statistical evidence, rather than 20 direct proof. Procedures that are “not racially neutral,” or “susceptible to abuse,” support a 21 finding of discriminatory purpose. Castaneda v. Partida 430 U.S. 482, 494-495.

22 Evidence Regarding Purposeful Discrimination

23 Defendant Sanchez based his challenge on underrepresentation of women, young people, 24 or Hispanics. Defendant did not make a prima facie showing of discrimination in violation of 25 the 14th Amendment with respect to young people or Hispanics for the reasons discussed herein.
26 He did make a prima facie showing of a 14th Amendment violation with respect to women.

28 Const. Article I, §16.

1 Evidence adduced at hearing demonstrated that over a significant period of time, there has been 2 substantial underrepresentation of women on the Ventura grand jury.

3 Distinct Group

4 An equal protection claim, like a fair cross section claim, may only be based on exclusion 5 of a "distinct group." A "distinct" or "cognizable" group is established by showing: (1) The 6 group is definite and ascertainable, readily defined; (2) Members of the group must share a 7 common perspective rising from their life experience in the group, i.e., a common social or 8 psychological outlook or perspective on human events gained precisely because they are 9 members of that group, and (3) The party seeking to demonstrate a violation of the rule also must 10 show that no other members of the community are capable of adequately representing the 11 perspective of the excluded group. Rubio v. Superior Court (1979) 24 Cal.3d 93. The party 12 seeking to demonstrate a violation of the rule must also show that no other members of the 13 community are capable of adequately representing the perspective of the excluded group. Rubio 14 v. Superior Court.

15 Women are a distinct group. Taylor v. Louisiana (1975) 419 U.S. 522, 531-53. Youth, 16 on the other hand, has not been recognized as a distinct group and defendant has not presented 17 evidence herein that would support its recognition as "distinct." "Young people are not a 18 cognizable class" People v. Henderson (1990) 225 Cal.App.3d 1129, 1153. California Courts of 19 Appeal have consistently found a failure to establish that young adults are a cognizable group.
20 People v. Estrada (1979) 93 Cal.App.3d 76; People v. Hoiland (1971) 22 Cal.App.3d 530.

21 The California Supreme Court has left the question open: "We have not spoken on the 22 question whether the young are a distinctive group; the Court of Appeal has rejected the claim a 23 number of times.... We need not determine whether the exclusion of the young falls under the 24 first prong of Duren,...because defendant has failed to establish a prima facie case under Duren's 25 third prong by showing that the disparity he complains of was caused by systematic exclusion."
26 People v Stansbury (1993) 4 Cal.4th 1017, 1061.

1 To constitute a distinct group, the group must be readily ascertainable, share a common 2 perspective arising from their life experience in the group, and it must be true that no other 3 members of the community are capable of adequately representing the perspective. Willis v Zant
4 (1983) 720 F.2d 1212. The testimony of Defendant's expert fell short. Dr. Weeks testified that 5 older people tend to be socially and politically more conservative than younger people, and that 6 it is the younger population, ages 15-30, that commits most of the crimes. He testified that the 7 group aged 18-44 have similarities in attitude, ideas or experience. He explained that people in 8 that age range are involving themselves in education, family formation and family building, job
9 acquisition, labor force participation, and career building. He stated they have very different 10 behavior and accompanying attitudes as compared to older groups. He noted that a majority of 11 parents of minor children are in this group, as are a majority of wage earners.

12 He concluded that, "One would expect a more common perspective among people in that 13 [young] group than they would share with people of different age groups." He could not testify 14 that they were a readily ascertainable distinct group sharing a common perspective arising from 15 membership in the group. His opinion was, "only that younger people are more likely to share 16 attitudes [and there is] less variability". He acknowledged major differences within the group.
17 When asked directly whether he would consider the group from 18 to 44 to be a distinctive group 18 he was unable to provide a direct answer in the affirmative. (RT 55:10-11).

19 In People v. Hoiland (1971) 22 Cal.App.3d 530, defendants were convicted in the Santa 20 Barbara Superior Court of participating in the 1970 Isla Vista riot that resulted in the destruction
21 of the Bank of America building. They appealed, contending that the grand jury that indicted 22 them was selected by a process that systematically excluded young people under the age of 30, 23 and that persons between the ages of 18 and 20 were improperly excluded from the trial jury.
24 "Defendants suggest[ed] that young people 'sympathetic to lawful student demonstrations' 25 would experience 'different emotional responses' than those of their elders." Id.at 533. The 26 Second District rejected their claims, finding that there was no evidence that individuals between 27 21 and 30 were a segment of the population that was a legally cognizable class requiring separate 28 constitutional recognition, because people in that age group lacked the quality of distinctiveness

1 required for creation of a legally cognizable class. Id. at 540. The fact that there is a sub-group 2 of society that shares a common factor and which was excluded from service is not enough to 3 make out a challenge. "The number of such sub-groupings which any criminal defendant might 4 be able to describe is limited only by the number of factors which can be enumerated in 5 describing the personal profile of the individual." Id. At 534.

6 Women - Substantial Period of Time and Substantial Underrepresentation

7 Defendant's evidence spanned a significant period of time, from 1995 to 2001, and 8 demonstrates substantial underrepresentation of women. Defendant Sanchez was indicted by the 9 2001-2002 grand jury. Dr. John R. Weeks, a professor of Geography and the Director of the 10 International Population Center in San Diego, offered statistical evidence in support of 11 Defendant's claim. Because 2000 was the most current Census data available, Dr. Weeks used 12 that information for purposes of comparing the Ventura population aged 18 or over with the 13 actual pools from which Ventura's grand jury was drawn.

14 In the year 2000, women constituted 51.1% of Ventura County's jury-eligible population, 15 and in 2001 they constituted 51.2%. (Table 4) By comparison, women constituted only 30% of 16 the 2001-2002 grand jury pool.⁴ Of 40 pool members, only 12 were women. This represents an 17 absolute disparity of 21.1, and a relative disparity of 41%. In terms of statistical significance, 18 Dr. Weeks assigned this disparity a Z-score of -2.64. "A probability value below 0.05 is 19 "generally considered to be statistically significant, i.e., when there is less than a 5% probability 20 that the disparity was due to chance." Coates v. Johnson & Johnson (7th Cir. 1985) 765 F.2d 524, 21 537.

22 As Dr. Weeks explained in his affidavit, at pp. 8-9, "Disparity is measured first by 23 absolute disparity, then by relative disparity, and finally by statistical significance of the 24 disparity. All three are required for a statistically appropriate measurement of the size of under-25 representation. Absolute disparity measures the simple absolute difference between the

26 _____
27 ⁴ This figure was 26.5% for the 2000-2001 pool from which Defendant Schultz' grand jury was 28 drawn, representing an absolute disparity of 24.6, to which Dr. Weeks assigned a Z-score of - 3.41. (Table 7)

1 percentage of people in the community who are in the cognizable group and the percentage of 2 that group as represented in the jury array."

3 Plaintiff points out that the statistics are slightly less disparate when one considers 4 the membership of the eventual grand jury panels (which were manipulated to improve 5 representation), rather than the membership up of the venire pools from which the juries were 6 drawn. But the fair cross section right has been consistently found to guarantee a grand jury 7 drawn from a fair cross section of the community. "The fair-cross-section requirement involves a 8 comparison of the makeup of jury venires or other sources from which jurors are drawn with the 9 makeup of the community..." Duren 439 U.S. at 364, n. 23.

10 The disparate representation of women in Ventura's grand jury pool was consistent 11 throughout a five-year period. From 1995 through 2000, there were a total of 333 grand jury 12 pool members in Ventura. Only 99 of the 333 were women, or 29.7% of the combined pool 13 from which grand juries were drawn. (Table 5). By contrast, during this same period women 14 generally constituted half of the jury eligible population. However, their representation in the 15 jury pool ranged from a low of 22.2% (1999) to a high of 33.7% (1996).

16 There is no categorical answer to the question of how great a disparity must be shown to 17 establish a prima facie case. "Although disparities between 10 percent and 15 percent have been 18 found significant in a few cases, several courts have held disparities in this range insufficient to 19 establish a prima facie case of either an equal protection or fair cross section violation. Absolute 20 disparities between 15 percent and 20 percent have generally been deemed significant, and 21 disparities of more than 20 percent have almost universally been deemed sufficient to establish a 22 prima facie case." 1 Beale 3:19, p. 3-92, Citations omitted.

23 In Ballard v. United States, (1946) 329 U.S. 187, intentional exclusion of women was 24 established where all women were excluded. In Duren v. Missouri (1979) 439 U.S. 357, the 25 court held that systematic exclusion of women that resulted in jury venires that averaged less 26 than 15 % women violated the fair cross section requirement. The discrepancy appeared in 27 nearly every weekly venire for over a year.

1 In Taylor v. Louisiana (1975) 419 U.S. 522, 524, the court invalidated a system in which 2 a woman was required to declare her willingness to serve before she could do so. As a result of 3 the declaration requirement, only 1% of the persons whose names were drawn from the jury 4 wheel were women, whereas women constituted 53% of the jury eligible population. In Ford v.
5 Seabold (1987) 841 F2d 677, the court described a system in Kentucky in which "Census figures 6 for 1970 indicate that women constituted nearly 53% of the population over eighteen years old in 7 Scott County. According to Ford's analysis, however, women constituted only 31.3% of the 1980 8 pool and only 34.3% of the 1981 pool." Id. At 683. The court stated that where the disparity is 9 not extreme, it is necessary to compare the absolute disparity.⁵ It noted in dicta that an absolute
10 disparity of "only" 21.7% was below that found unreasonable in Duren.⁶

11 Plaintiff argued that the disparity here is less than a 21% disparity that was found not to 12 be disproportionate in Williams v. Dalsheim, (1979) 480 F.Supp.1049. While it is true that the 13 petitioner's particular panel in Williams v. Dalsheim was composed of 26% percent women, the 14 court based its finding of adequate representation on an average representation over time of 33%.
15 Id. At 1055. The court stated, " it is this court's opinion that jury venires averaging 33% is not a 16 result that yields unconstitutional representation within the meaning of Duren." Id. at 1056.
17 Here, 33% represents the all time high for representation over a six-year period, not the average, 18

20 ⁵ "The crucial question in determining whether the second prong of the Duren test is met is 21 whether jury pools consisting of 31.3% and 34.3% women are fair and reasonable in relation to 22 the actual percentage of women over eighteen in Scott County (53%). In Duren, the relevant 23 community was comprised of 54% women. The Court found that jury venires containing 24 approximately 15% women were not representative of the community. Duren, 439 U.S. at 365-25 66. The lack of women in the jury pools in this case, however, is not nearly as severe as in 26 Duren. Because the percentage of women in the community differs slightly from the percentage 27 of women in the community in Duren, it is necessary to compare the absolute disparity of the 28 two cases." Ford v. Seabold at 683-684.

⁶ "In Duren, the disparity between the percentage of women in the community and the percentage present in the jury venires was 39%. Here, on the other hand, the disparity is only 21.7% for 1980 and 18.7% for 1981, far below that found unreasonable in Duren. We need not decide whether a disparity of 18.7% or 21.7% is unreasonable, however, since we conclude that women were not systematically excluded during the selection process." Id. At 681.

1 and representation has dropped as low as 22%. The prosecutor conceded at oral argument herein
2 that the numbers for women “come close” the “ballpark of underrepresentation.” (RT 67:2-13)

3 In Ventura, the absolute disparity for women ranged from 17.1 (1996) to 28.8 (1999)
4 over the years leading up to Defendant’s indictment. The 1995-1996 pool had 27.4% women, 5 while Ventura's jury eligible population was 50.8% female. This was an absolute disparity of 6 23.3, and a relative disparity of 77%, to which Dr. Weeks assigned a Z-score of -5.03 (Of 117
7 pool members, 32 were female.) (Table 12.)

8 The 1996-1997 pool had 33.7% women, while the jury eligible population was again
9 50.8% female. This was an absolute disparity of 17.1, and a relative disparity of 34%, to which 10 Dr. Weeks assigned a Z-score of -3.43 (Of 101 pool members, 34 were female.) (Table 11)

11 The 1997-1998 pool had 29.9% women, while the jury eligible population was 50.9%.
12 This was an absolute disparity of 21.0, and a relative disparity of 41%, to which Dr. Weeks
13 assigned a Z-score of -3.90 (Of 87 pool members, 26 were female.) (Table 10)

14 The 1998-1999 pool had 24% women, while the jury eligible population was 51%
15 female. This was an absolute disparity of 27.0, and a relative disparity of 53%, to which Dr.
16 Weeks assigned a Z-score of -4.65. (Of 75 pool members, 18 were female.) (Table 9)

17 The 1999-2000 pool had 22.2% women, while the jury eligible population was again
18 51% female. This was an absolute disparity of 28.8, and a relative disparity of 56%, to which 19 Dr. Weeks assigned a Z-score of -4.19. (Of 54 pool members, 12 were female.) (Table 8)

20 The 2000-2001 pool was 26.5% female, while the jury eligible population was 51.1%
21 female. This was an absolute disparity of 24.6, and a relative disparity of 48%, to which Dr.
22 Weeks assigned a Z-score of -3.41. As previously noted, the Z-score for the 2001-2002 grand 23 jury pool was -2.64.

24 As Dr. Weeks explained, "statistical significance means that the difference between what 25 we expected and what we observed is so large that it's unlikely that it would have happened by 26 chance alone, that something is going on." (RT 69:19-23). "The Z score tells us how far away
27 this relative disparity is from what we might expect by chance alone..." (RT 67:23-26) As noted 28 above, the Z score for women ranged from -2.64 to -5.03 leading up to Defendant’s indictment.

1 Dr. Weeks testified that any (negative) number that is over 1.96 is statistically significant at the 2 95 percent level, (RT 69:2-4), indicating that "95 times out of a hundred, when we looked at data
3 from the community, we would not expect to see a disparity this large. Only five times out of a 4 hundred could we have gotten that. So it's a very low chance that we could get a disparity that 5 large just by chance alone from the community." (RT 69:13-18.)

6 The prosecutor candidly stated at oral argument, "I'm really at a loss to explain why there 7 is not a better representation of women..." (RT 64:23-24) "I'm at a loss to understand why they 8 are underrepresented, but there is nothing about the use of volunteers or the use of press releases 9 or anything about the procedures that are being used here that would show a systematic 10 exclusion of women." (RT 67:18-22) The defendant suggested childcare considerations would 11 likely deter women from voluntarily making a year long commitment to serve five days a week.
12 Ventura's Jury Commissioner testified that she did not think Ventura has any problem getting 13 close to 50 percent women in the master jury wheel for petit jurors, who are summoned. (RT 14 23:22-24.)

15 Hispanics - Representation

16 Evidence adduced at hearing did not demonstrate substantial underrepresentation of 17 Hispanics on the Ventura grand jury over a significant period of time. In the year 2000, 18 Hispanics constituted 17.7% of the 386,510 jury eligible population of Ventura County, adjusted 19 for age of majority, citizenship, English language ability, felony convictions, and residency.
20 (Declaration of Weeks, ¶16, Table 3, Testimony of Weeks RT 12/13/01, 48:7-20-49:1) In 2001 21 they constituted 18.2%. (Dr. Weeks arrived at this number by extrapolation, based on a 22 continuation of trends for the 1990 to 2000 Census periods. Weeks, ¶17, Table 4). With respect 23 to the 2001-2002 grand jury pool, Hispanics constituted 7.5%. Of 40 pool members, 3 were 24 Hispanic. (Supplemental Declaration of Dr. Weeks, ¶4⁷, Table 1.) Using the 2000 Census data, 25 he found that this represented an absolute disparity of 10.2, and a relative disparity of 58%, to 26

28 ⁷ Dr. Weeks notes that more than half of the people had been in the pool in one or more previous years. (¶4)

1 which Dr. Weeks assigns a Z-score that is not statistically significant, -1.67 . (Id.) He testified
2 that a (negative) number that is over 1.96 is statistically significant. (RT 69:2-4)

3 From 1995 through 2001, there were a total of 516 applicants for the grand jury pool in 4 Ventura, only 352 of which were unduplicated (non-holdover) applicants. At the time he 5 prepared his evidence, Dr. Weeks had not received information about who among the 2001-2002 6 applicant pool had been nominees previously, so he excluded 2001-2002 from his initial 7 analysis. (Weeks at ¶21).⁸ From 1995 through 2000, 333 persons were in the pool. Dr. Weeks
8 declares that there were only 26 Hispanics in the pool during this six-year period, representing 9 7.8% of the pool, when 17.7% would be expected. (¶23, Table 5) This represents an absolute 10 disparity of 9.9, to which he assigned a Z-score of -4.72 . As previously noted, "Although 11 disparities between 10 percent and 15 percent have been found significant in a few cases, several 12 courts have held disparities in this range insufficient to establish a prima facie case of either an 13 equal protection or fair cross section violation." 1 Beale supra, 3:19, p. 3-92.

14 Viewing the pool statistics for each of the years from 1995-2001, there are insufficient 15 disparities to demonstrate significant underrepresentation of Hispanics over time. The 1995-16 1996 pool was 7.7% Hispanic, while Ventura's jury eligible population was 15.5% Hispanic.
17 This was an absolute disparity of 7.8, and a relative disparity of 50%, to which Dr. Weeks
18 assigned a Z-score of -2.32 (Of 117 pool members, 9 were Hispanic.) (Table 12.)

19 The 1996-1997 pool was 8.9% Hispanics, while the jury eligible population was 16.0%
20 Hispanic. This was an absolute disparity of 7.1, and a relative disparity of 44%, to which Dr.
21 Weeks assigned a Z-score of -1.93 (Of 101 pool members, 9 were Hispanic.) (Table 11).

22 The 1997-1998 pool was 8% Hispanic, while the jury eligible population was 16.4%
23 Hispanic. This was an absolute disparity of 8.4, and a relative disparity of 51%, to which Dr.
24 Weeks assigned a Z-score of -2.09 (Of 87 pool members, 7 were Hispanic.) (Table 10).

26
27
28 ⁸ Subsequently, he obtained additional information and submitted a Supplemental Declaration, addressing the 2001-2002 pool at Table 1.

1 The 1998-1999 pool was 8.0% Hispanic, while the jury eligible population was 16.9%
2 Hispanic. This was an absolute disparity of 8.9, and a relative disparity of 53%, to which Dr.
3 Weeks assigned a Z-score of -2.04. (Of 75 pool members, 6 were Hispanic.) (Table 9).

4 The 1999-2000 pool was 13% Hispanic, while the jury eligible population was 17.3%
5 Hispanic. This was an absolute disparity of 4.3, and a relative disparity of 25%, to which Dr.
6 Weeks assigned a Z-score of -0.83. (Of 54 pool members, 7 were Hispanic.) (Table 8)

7 The 2000-2001 pool was 14.3% Hispanic, while the jury eligible population was 17.7%
8 Hispanic. This was an absolute disparity of 3.4, and a relative disparity of 19%, to which Dr.
9 Weeks assigned a Z-score of -0.62. (Of 49 pool members, 7 were Hispanic.)

10 The 2001-2002 pool, from which Defendant Sanchez' grand jury was drawn, was 7.5% 11 Hispanic, while the jury eligible population was 17.7% Hispanic (based on 2000 data). This was 12 an absolute disparity of 10.2, and a relative disparity of 58%, to which Dr. Weeks assigned a Z-13 score of -1.67.

14 Thus, as Dr. Weeks concedes, in each of the years from 1996 to 2000, under-15 representation of Hispanics was not statistically significant. Dr. Weeks states with respect to 16 each of these years, "...the pattern persists of too few Hispanics, women and younger people, 17 with only the latter two representing differences that are large enough to be statistically 18 significant for this one year." Weeks Dec., ¶30 (1999-2000, Table 8), ¶31 (1998-1999, Table 9), 19 ¶32 (1997-1998, Table 10), and ¶33 (1996-1997, Table 11). Emphasis supplied.

20 In sum, Defendant made a prima facie showing of a 14th Amendment violation with 21 respect to women only. Defendant failed to make such a showing with respect to Hispanics.
22 Defendant's challenge based on exclusion of youth fails because he did not demonstrate that 23 youth is a distinct and cognizable group.

24 Rebuttal Evidence

25 The government successfully rebutted Defendant's showing with respect to under-26 representation of women by demonstrating that no discriminatory purpose was involved. Ms.
27 Yost testified to outreach efforts made in an earnest attempt to obtain a more representative pool
28 of applicants. She testified that she extended the application deadline, contacted female judges

1 and asked for names of women's organizations, and sent applications to them. (16:23-17:7) She 2 made similar efforts to reach out to the Mexican-American Bar Association and the Oxnard
3 Neighborhood Councils. (17:9-16). The government has negated the element of purposeful 4 discrimination, and the 14th Amendment claim must fail.

5 6 II. Fair Cross Section

7 Defendant contends alternatively that his Grand Jury was not drawn from a “fair cross 8 section” of the Ventura Community. A successful “fair cross section” challenge does not require 9 purposeful discrimination.

10 Standing

11 A male defendant has standing to object to the exclusion of women from his jury on fair 12 cross section grounds. Taylor v. Louisiana (1975) 419 U.S. 522. "If the exclusion of any group 13 deprives the jury pool of its representative character, the fair cross section requirement is 14 violated, and every defendant should have standing to raise the issue." 1 Beale 3:11, p 3-47.
15 Thus, the Court of Appeal of California, First District, held in People v. Navarette (1976) 54 Cal.
16 App. 3d 1064 that "the trial court erred in determining that, because he was a male, Peraza was 17 precluded from challenging the grand jury on the ground that women were underrepresented 18 thereon." People v. Navarette at 1076.

19 Source of Protection

20 The first issue to be resolved is whether there is a constitutional or statutory guarantee 21 that a California grand jury be drawn from a fair cross section. Both sides cite California
22 authorities that for the most part arose in the petit jury context.⁹ From this they assumed a right 23

24 ⁹ In People v. Harris, (1984) 36 Cal.3d 36, it was held that use of only voter registration lists 25 violates the fair cross section requirement, but it is in the context of a petit jury. People v.
26 Henderson (1990) 225 Cal.App.3d 1129, 1153, concerned a 6th Amendment petit jury challenge.
27 ["Young people do not constitute a cognizable class for purposes of the cross-section rule."] People v. McCoy (1995) 40 Cal.App.4th 778, 783, was a petit jury challenge. The court stated, 28 "Under the Sixth Amendment of the United States Constitution and article I, section 16 of the California Constitution, a defendant is entitled to a jury venire drawn from a representative cross-section of the community," "...it is settled as a matter of law that both Blacks and

1 to fair cross section in a California grand jury. Defendant relied primarily for this extension on 2 Pierre v. Louisiana (1939) 306 U.S. 354, “Principles which forbid discrimination in the selection
3 of Petit Juries also govern the selection of Grand Juries,” and People v. Newton (1970) 8
4 Cal.App.3d 359, 388.

5 Pierre v. Louisiana considered a 14th Amendment equal protection challenge to a grand 6 jury, not a 6th Amendment Fair Cross Section challenge. The defendant “did prove at the trial of 7 said motion to Quash that Negroes as persons of color had been purposely excluded from the 8 Grand Jury Venire and Panel which returned said indictment against ... (petitioner) on account 9 of their color and race.” Id. at 362.

10 People v. Newton was a California case in which the Defendant challenged both the 11 grand jury and the petit jury. The grand jury claim was only discussed in terms of the 14th 12 Amendment’s equal protection provision, not 6th Amendment cross-section: “The constitutional 13 standards controlling the selection of grand jurors are the same as for petit jurors. [Citation] They 14 must be selected in a manner which does not systematically exclude, or substantially 15 underrepresent, the members of any identifiable group in the community.” The Newton court did 16 go on to consider a 6th Amendment Fair Cross Section claim to the petit jury that tried the 17 defendant, but did not consider a cross-section challenge to the grand jury.

18 6th Amendment Guarantee – Fair Cross Section

19 There is no question that the 6th Amendment to the United States Constitution provides a 20 right to a fair cross section for a trial (“petit”) jury. The 6th Amendment is silent as to grand 21 juries. It guarantees trial “by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall 22 have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law...” and 23 guarantees the accused the right to be tried by a jury drawn from “a representative cross section

26 Hispanics are distinctive or cognizable groups” and “persons 70 and older do not constitute a 27 cognizable group.” People v. McGhee (1987) 193 Cal.App.3d 1333, concerned a claim that the 28 prosecutor demonstrated group bias in excluding trial jurors. [“Youth is not recognized as a cognizable class for purposes of a Wheeler motion.” Id. at 1351-1352.]

1 of the community.” Taylor v. Louisiana (1975) 419 U.S. 357, 368 n.26. A grand jury proceeding 2 is not a trial.

3 The purpose of guaranteeing trial by a jury drawn from a fair cross section jury is to 4 assure diffused impartiality, and also to share the civic responsibility of administration of justice:

5 “We accept the fair-cross-section requirement as fundamental to the jury trial guaranteed
6 by the Sixth Amendment and are convinced that the requirement has solid foundation.
7 The purpose of a jury is to guard against the exercise of arbitrary power--to make 8 available the commonsense judgment of the community as a hedge against the 9 overzealous or mistaken prosecutor and in preference to the professional or perhaps 10 overconditioned or biased response of a judge. [Citation omitted.] This prophylactic 11 vehicle is not provided if the jury pool is made up of only special segments of the 12 populace or if large, distinctive groups are excluded from the pool. Community 13 participation in the administration of the criminal law, moreover, is not only consistent 14 with our democratic heritage but is also critical to public confidence in the fairness of the 15 criminal justice system. Restricting jury service to only special groups or excluding 16 identifiable segments playing major roles in the community cannot be squared with the 17 constitutional concept of jury trial. 'Trial by jury presupposes a jury drawn from a pool 18 broadly representative of the community as well as impartial in a specific case. . . . (T)he 19 broad representative character of the jury should be maintained, partly as assurance of a 20 diffused impartiality and partly because sharing in the administration of justice is a phase 21 of civic responsibility.' Thiel v. Southern Pacific Co., 328 U.S. 217, 227, 66 S. Ct. 984, 22 90 L.Ed. 1181 (1946) (Frankfurter, J., dissenting).”

23 Taylor v. Louisiana (1975) 419 U.S. 522, 530-531.

24 The 6th Amendment applies, however, only to trial juries and makes no provision for 25 grand juries, which serve a different function. “A grand jury determines only if there is 26 sufficient evidence to warrant a trial. The petit jury decides ultimate guilt.” People v. Hoiland
27 (1971) 22 Cal.App.3d 530, 538.

28 A right to a fair cross section does apply to federal grand juries by federal statute. 28 USC §1861. “The Jury Selection and Service Act of 1968, 28 U.S.C. §§ 1861 et seq., establishes a detailed procedure to assure that grand and petit juries are randomly selected from a fair cross section of the community. Although the statute attempts to implement constitutional requirements, the right to a jury ‘selected at random’ is a statutory creation, 28 U.S.C. § 1866(f)

1 (emphasis added), not a constitutional command.” United States v Hawkins (1978) 566 F.2d 2 1006, 1012.¹⁰

3 It appears that in state prosecutions, there is no right to a grand jury drawn from a fair 4 cross section of the community unless there is a state statute or constitutional provision that so 5 provides. “In state prosecutions in contrast, unless there is a state statute or constitutional 6 provision on point, there is no right to a grand jury drawn from a cross section of the 7 community.” 1 Beale, Grand Jury Law & Practice (2nd ed. 1997) §3.12, pp.3-58 to 3-59. Based 8 upon the clear language of the 6th Amendment, and a review of federal and state reported 9 decisions, this court is persuaded that Beale is correct. Absent state law guarantee, there is no 10 right to a state grand jury drawn from a fair cross section.

11 The court is aware that the Fifth Circuit has stated otherwise in dicta. In Murphy v.
12 Johnson (5th Cir. 2000) 205 F.3d 809, it suggested that the Sixth Amendment right to a fair 13 cross-section applies to state grand juries, as well as petit juries, regardless of any state law
14 guarantee. The authorities relied upon by the Fifth Circuit do not support its conclusion. It 15 relied upon Curry v. Estelle (5th Cir. 1975) 524 F.2d 981, Taylor v. Louisiana (1975) 419 U.S.
16 522, and Peters v. Kiff (1972) 407 U.S. 493.

17 In Curry v. Estelle, the court recognized a fair cross section guarantee, but did not 18 identify its source. As authority, the Curry court cited Taylor v. Louisiana. Taylor v. Louisiana, 19 involved a challenge to a petit, not grand, jury. Peters v. Kiff, was a 14th Amendment case in 20 which there was evidence of purposeful exclusion of Afro-Americans from both petit and grand 21 juries; the jury lists for both petit and grand jurors were made up from tax digests that were by 22 law segregated by race. There was no discussion of whether the 6th Amendment fair cross section 23 guarantee applies to grand, as well as petit, juries.

25
26
27 ¹⁰ “Unlike the jury trial clause of the Sixth Amendment, the grand jury clause of the Fifth 28 Amendment has not been incorporated into the Fourteenth Amendment.” 1 Beale, Grand Jury Law & Practice, §3.12, citing People v. Hurtado (1883) 63 Cal. 288.

1 California State Law Guarantee – Fair Cross Section

2 The question then becomes whether California law provides a fair cross section 3 guarantee, rendering Defendant’s fair cross section challenge cognizable. The California 4 Legislature has expressed a general intent that all qualified persons have an obligation to serve 5 on criminal grand juries, and that they are to be drawn from a fair cross section. Section 904.6(e) 6 of the Penal Code provides, “It is the intent of the Legislature that all persons qualified for jury 7 service shall have an equal opportunity to be considered for service as criminal grand jurors in 8 the county in which they reside, and that they have an obligation to serve, when summoned for 9 that purpose. All persons selected for the additional criminal grand jury shall be selected at 10 random from a source or sources reasonably representative of a cross section of the population 11 which is eligible for jury service in the county.”

12 Thus, the Legislature expressed in the first sentence of 904.6(e) its intent that the fair 13 cross section requirement, along with compulsory service and random selection, apply generally 14 to all "criminal grand jurors." However, it did not include express "fair cross section" language 15 in the provisions regarding a regular grand jury.

16 Prior to enactment of 904.6(e) in 1991, there was assumed to be a right to a grand jury
17 drawn from a fair cross section, but the source of the right was unclear. People v. Dean (1974)
18 38 Cal.App.3d 966, cited by Defendant, did recognize a right to a "fair cross section" in a 19 California grand jury, but this was based on the rule that "systematical and purposeful exclusion 20 from a grand jury of a class of persons in the community denies due process and equal protection 21 of the law," which are 14th Amendment considerations.

22 The court is aware of several other California cases in which a cross section challenge to 23 a grand jury was considered. People v. Estrada (1979) 93 Cal.App.3d 76, People v. Johnson 24 (1973) 33 Cal.App.3d 9, and People v. Corona (1989) 211 Cal.App.3d 529. The cases were 25 decided prior to the 1991 enactment of 904.6(e) by amendment. In each case the court rejected 26 the claims and did not clearly identify the source of a right to a fair cross section in a state grand 27 jury.

1 In People v. Estrada the First District considered a fair cross section challenge to a grand 2 jury on the merits. The Court held that the groups the defendant claimed were excluded (“less-3 educated,” “young adults,” “blue collar workers,” and “households with family incomes less than 4 $15,000”) were not constitutionally “cognizable,” and so the court did not address the remaining 5 two Duren cross section factors. As authority for entertaining the fair cross section challenge, 6 the Estrada court simply stated “A defendant’s right to a representative cross-section has long 7 been recognized by the United States Supreme Court and our state Supreme Court.” Citing Thiel
8 v. Southern Pacific Co. (1946) 328 U.S. 217 (a personal injury case, where no grand jury 9 questions could be entertained), and People v. Carter 56 Cal.2d 549, 569 (a challenge to a petit 10 jury). The Estrada court did not discuss the question of raising a fair cross section claim in a 11 California state court; neither did it indicate whether it was relying on the United States
12 Constitution, the California Constitution, or upon statute.

13 A California court also considered, briefly, a fair cross section claim to a state grand jury 14 in People v. Johnson (1973) 33 Cal.App.3d 9. The claim was rejected out of hand with reference 15 only to a federal case¹¹ and a state case based on the equal protection clause of the 14th
16 Amendment.¹² Again, no constitutional basis for a fair cross section claim to a state grand jury 17 was identified.

18 In 1990, Proposition 115 affected a dramatic change in felony criminal case processing in 19 California. It enacted Article I, Section 14.1 of the California Constitution which reads as 20 follows: "If a felony is prosecuted by indictment, there shall be no post indictment preliminary 21 hearing." AB 607 in the 1991 legislative term was enacted to clarify the procedures to be 22 utilized for commencing felony prosecutions.

23 The Senate Committee on Judiciary Analysis report for the hearing of July 16, 1991 in 24 regard to this enactment is quoted in 76 Op. Atty. Gen. Cal. 181 (1993). It states the historical

25
26 ¹¹ Zelechower v. Younger (9th Cir. 1970) 424 F.2d 1256, in which a similar challenge was 27 rejected.

1 context for the legislation under consideration. It notes that grand juries were utilized for 2 indictment purposes prior to 1978. Then, "[t]he long-standing right of grand juries to issue 3 indictments was qualified by Hawkins v. Superior Court 22 Cal.3d 572 in 1978, wherein the 4 court opined that 'due process requires that an indicted defendant is entitled on his timely motion
5 to a post-indictment preliminary hearing.' Thus, as a preliminary hearing was required to follow 6 a grand jury proceeding, the indictment was generally abandoned in favor of a preliminary 7 hearing on the charges in municipal court, and the function of the grand jury was limited to 8 governmental oversight and the occasional criminal action in cases of official malfeasance.

9 "Last year the voters adopted Prop. 115, the 'Crime Victims Justice Initiative,' which 10 overruled Hawkins by permitting an indictment as the initiation of criminal proceedings without 11 a requirement of a subsequent preliminary hearing. District attorneys were free to choose 12 indictment, rather than hearing, as the course of action in pursuing a case. Some have chosen to 13 exercise this option freely, therefore imposing a significant criminal workload on grand juries 14 still responsible for their civil obligations.

15 "This bill would bifurcate the institution of the grand jury into two forms, civil and 16 criminal, authorizing counties to combine both functions in a single grand jury, or to establish 17 independent criminal grand juries upon the decision of the presiding judge of the superior court 18 or at the request of the District Attorney or the Attorney General. The civil grand jury would be 19 authorized to inquire into county matters or return accusations of misconduct by public officials 20 in the manner such juries functioned prior to Proposition 115 and pursuant to Hawkins; the 21 criminal grand jury would be authorized to return indictments for public offenses pursuant to 22 Proposition 115. Individuals serving in the capacity of criminal grand jurors, whether on an

27 ¹² Montez v. Superior Court (1970) 10 Cal.App.3d 343, in which a challenge of systematic 28 exclusion of Hispanics (a class of which defendant was a member) was based on the Equal Protection Clause of the 14th Amendment.

1 The question is whether, in enacting 904.6, the Legislature intended the fair cross section 2 guarantee to apply only to persons accused in counties that utilize a second 904.6 criminal grand 3 jury, or whether it intended that guarantee to also apply to persons accused in counties such as 4 Ventura, where the court constitutes a single grand jury for all purposes under section 896. The 5 latter construction comports with the Attorney General’s opinion.

6 The fundamental rules of statutory construction require “First, the court should ascertain 7 the intent of the Legislature so as to effectuate the purpose of the law.” [Citations omitted]
8 Secondly, the provision must be given a reasonable and common sense interpretation consistent 9 with the apparent purpose and intention of the lawmakers, practical rather than technical in 10 nature, which upon application will result in wise policy rather than mischief or absurdity.
11 [Citations] Significance, if possible, should be attributed to every word, phrase, sentence and 12 part of an act in pursuance of the legislative purpose, as ‘the various parts of a statutory 13 enactment must be harmonized by considering the particular clause or section in the context of 14 the statutory framework as a whole.’ [Citation] ‘The court should take into account matters such 15 as context, the object in view, the evils to be remedied, the history of the times and of legislation 16 upon the same subject, public policy, and contemporaneous construction.’ [Citations]...”
17 DeYoung v. City of San Diego (1983) 147 Cal.App.3d 11, 17.

18 Legislative history discloses an intent that any grand jury with the power over criminal 19 indictments would be drawn from a panel meeting specific standards for criminal service, 20 including a fair cross section and compulsory service. The Senate Committee was of the opinion 21 that section 904.6 would confer a fair cross section requirement on any criminal grand jury, 22 whether constituted under either section 904.6 or section 896. The Senate Committee on 23 Judiciary’s report for the committee hearing on July 16, 1991, provided the following analysis:
24 “...Individuals serving in the capacity of criminal grand jurors, whether on an independent panel 25 or a unified body bringing an indictment in a criminal case, would be required to meet standards 26 specified for criminal grand jury service.

1 "The purpose of this measure is to permit counties to establish additional grand juries to 2 handle criminal indictments as authorized by Proposition 115, composed in a manner to preclude 3 challenge for the 'technicality' of an unrepresentative panel."

4 The Assembly Committee, was of the opinion that criminal indictments would be issued 5 solely by 904.6 grand juries. The Assembly Committee on Public Safety for the committee 6 hearing on April 9, 1991, stated in part: "This bill will leave the selection process and powers of 7 the civil grand jury intact with the exception of the power to issue criminal indictments. That 8 function will reside exclusively with the criminal grand jury."¹³

9 Under either analysis, it was intended that criminal grand jurors would be drawn from a 10 fair cross section. By enacting 904.6(e), the Legislature has created a process right. Contrary 11 interpretation would lead to the conclusion that a defendant indicted by a grand jury in a county
12 with a 904.6 grand jury would have the statutory right to a fair cross section. The defendant 13 charged with the same crime in an adjoining county, with only an 896 jury, would not. Such a 14 construction would run afoul of the 14th Amendment's equal protection provisions.

15 "[A] statute which is reasonably susceptible of two constructions should be interpreted so 16 as to render it constitutional." San Francisco Unified School District v. Johnson (1971) 3 Cal.3d 17 937, 942. "If a statute is susceptible of two constructions, one of which will render it 18 constitutional and the other unconstitutional in whole or in part, or raise serious and doubtful 19 constitutional questions, the court will adopt the construction which, without doing violence to 20 the reasonable meaning of the language used, will render it valid in its entirety, or free from 21 doubt as to its constitutionality, even though the other construction is equally reasonable.

22 _____
23 ¹³ These policy declarations of the California legislature are similar to those made by 24 Congress in enacting the federal statutory grand jury cross section guarantee. 28 USC §1861, of the Policy of Jury Selection and Service Act of 1968, provides:

25 "It is the policy of the United States that all litigants in Federal courts entitled to trial by 26 jury shall have the right to grand and petit juries selected at random from a fair cross section of 27 the community in the district or division wherein the court convenes. It is further the policy of 28 the United States that all citizens shall have the opportunity to be considered for service on grand and petit juries in the district courts of the United States, and shall have an obligation to serve as jurors when summoned for that purpose."

1 [Citations.] The basis of this rule is the presumption that the Legislature intended, not to violate 2 the Constitution, but to enact a valid statute within the scope of its constitutional powers." Miller
3 v. Municipal Court (1943) 22 Cal.2d 818, 828.

4 If not construed together, to guarantee a right to a fair cross section in both 896 and 904.6 5 counties, the statutory scheme would have an inherent constitutional defect in that it would 6 violate the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment. In Supplemental Briefing, Plaintiff 7 argued that differences in treatment from county to county do not necessarily violate equal 8 protection, citing People v. Superior Court (Skoblov) (1988) 195 Cal.App.3d 1209, 1214 and 9 Bowens v. Superior Court (1991) 1 Cal.4th 36. As a broad proposition, this statement is true, but 10 it has no application in the instant case.

11 In Bowens v. Superior Court, the California Supreme Court held that an indicted 12 defendant is no longer deemed denied the equal protection of the laws under article I, section 7 13 of the California Constitution, by virtue of the defendant's failure to receive a post indictment 14 hearing. Its holding was based upon the enactment of article I, section 14.1 of the California 15 Constitution, abrogating the Court's prior holding to the contrary. The Court emphasized that 16 equal protection remains a viable right of a criminal defendant in California. "We reiterate, 17 however, that the California Constitution continues to afford criminal defendants an independent 18 source of protection from infringement of certain rights, including the right to equal protection 19 and due process of the law. [Citations] These general rights of criminal defendants, however, are 20 necessarily limited to the extent they are inconsistent with the express prohibition of post 21 indictment preliminary hearings contained in article I, section 14.1." (Id. at 45, fn 4.) No such 22 express constitutional limitation applies in the case at hand.

23 In People v. Superior Court (Skoblov) (1988) 195 Cal.App.3d 1209, also relied on by 24 plaintiff, the court approved territorial distinctions within a state where they are rationally related 25 to legitimate local factors, in the case of a non-fundamental right – diversion. The county in 26 which Defendant Skoblov was charged with a misdemeanor petty theft did not have a diversion 27 program, while other counties did. Section 1001.50 of the Penal Code left to the county board of 28 supervisors the choice whether or not to adopt diversion programs. Equal protection did not

1 require territorial uniformity because territorial distinctions were rationally related to legitimate 2 local factors, including “socioeconomic and demographic data, local law enforcement 3 conditions, health factors, existing social services, and availability of resources.” Here, on the 4 other hand, the right to a grand jury drawn from a fair cross section is of uniform concern
5 statewide, as expressed in the Legislative History set forth above, and any territorial distinction 6 would be palpably arbitrary and discriminatory.

7 This court concludes that the provision of Title IV, Grand Jury Proceedings, of Part 2 of 8 the Penal Code, read together, confer a right to a criminal grand jury drawn from a fair cross 9 section, to be accomplished through compulsory service and random selection, as described in 10 904.6(e). Construing California’s grand jury statutes together, and keeping in mind the statutory 11 purpose, this court finds that California statutory law does provide Defendant with a right to a 12 grand jury drawn from a fair cross section. Ventura is not required to empanel a 904.6 grand 13 jury. However, if it opts to have a regular grand jury issue criminal indictments, it must provide 14 a grand jury drawn from a fair cross section. Impossibility of obtaining a fair cross section 15 willing to serve for a full year term does not excuse compliance, because the option of a short-16 term criminal grand jury is available under section 904.6.

17 Legal Standard – Fair Cross Section Guarantee

18 “The elements of a prima facie violation of a fair-cross section statute are generally the 19 same as the elements of a Sixth Amendment violation.” 1 Beale, Grand Jury Law and Practice, 20 3:11, p 3-45. A defendant raising a fair cross section challenge must make a prima facie showing 21 that (1) the group alleged to be excluded is a 'distinctive group in the community'; (2) it’s 22 representation 'is not fair and reasonable in relation to the number of such persons in the 23 community,' and (3) the underrepresentation in venires from which juries are drawn is 'due to 24 systematic exclusion of the group in the jury selection process.’” Duren v. Missouri (1979) 439 25 U.S. 357, 364 and People v Stansbury (1993) 4 Cal.4th 1017, 1061.

26 There must be an “improper feature” to the process to satisfy the third prong: systematic 27 exclusion. “Defendant cannot establish a prima facie case of systematic exclusion of Hispanics 28 merely by presenting statistical evidence of underrepresentation in the jury pool, venire, or panel.

1 He must show that any underrepresentation "is the result of an improper feature of the jury-
2 selection process." People v. Howard (1992) 1 Cal.4th 1132, 1160; People v. Ayala (2000) 23 3 Cal.4th 225, 256 (in which challenge to San Diego petit jury was unsuccessful where 4 commissioner randomly summoned prospective jurors from voter registration and 5 license/identification lists).

6 Once Defendant makes this prima facie showing, lack of discriminatory intent is 7 irrelevant and will not rebut the prima facie showing of a fair cross section violation. "[I]n Sixth 8 Amendment fair-cross-section cases, systematic disproportion itself demonstrates an 9 infringement of the defendant's interest in a jury chosen from a fair community cross section.
10 The only remaining question is whether there is adequate justification for this infringement."
11 Duren v. Missouri (1979) 439 U.S. 357, 368 fn. 26.

12 Evidence Regarding Fair Cross Section Challenge

13 Systematic exclusion of women from jury panels violates the fair cross section 14 requirement. In Taylor v. Louisiana (1975) 419 U.S. 522, 531, the court stated, "We are also 15 persuaded that the fair-cross-section requirement is violated by the systematic exclusion of 16 women, who in the judicial district involved here amounted to 53% of the citizens eligible for 17 jury service. This conclusion necessarily entails the judgment that women are sufficiently 18 numerous and distinct from men and that if they are systematically eliminated from jury panels, 19 the Sixth Amendment's fair-cross-section requirement cannot be satisfied."

20 As discussed above, Defendant has demonstrated that women are substantially under-21 represented in Ventura's grand jury pools as a result of systematic exclusion. (See Evidence 22 Regarding Purposeful Discrimination.) The court is persuaded that the failure to employ 23 compulsory service and random selection for criminal grand jurors as described in 904.6(e) is an 24 improper feature. Defendant has therefore demonstrated a violation of his statutory right to a 25 grand jury drawn from a fair cross section.

1 III. Remedy

2 As noted above, the fair cross section violation here was statutory, not constitutional. If 3 there is a remedy, it is to be found in section 995 of the Penal Code and this motion will be 4 construed as a Motion to Set Aside indictment pursuant to Penal Code section 995.

5 The Plaintiff, in its supplemental brief, states that it appears the correct method to attack 6 the composition of a grand jury before trial is a motion to quash the indictment, rather than a 7 motion to dismiss pursuant to section 995, citing Vasquez v. Hillery (1986) 474 U.S. 254 and 8 People v. Navarette (1976) 54 Cal.App.3d 1064. It is apparent from these authorities that a 9 motion to quash has been employed as a proper vehicle. It is not apparent that it is the exclusive 10 procedural means available. In Vasquez, the Court held that Defendant's motion to quash 11 indictment should have been granted by a California Superior Court because Defendant 12 demonstrated intentional discrimination. Accordingly, the Court affirmed an order granting his 13 federal petition for a writ of habeas corpus. The Vasquez Court did not disapprove or discuss 14 alternative procedural vehicles that might be employed pretrial.

15 In People v. Navarette, supra, one male and one female defendant challenged their 16 indictments by way of motion to quash on the ground that the 1973 Santa Clara grand jury was 17 under-representative of women. The trial court found an absence of discriminatory purpose, but 18 did find significant underrepresentation. On that basis, it granted the female's motion to quash
19 but denied that of the male. On review, the First District vacated the order quashing the female's 20 indictment, and also denied the male's petition for writ of prohibition, finding that "at the time of 21 the selection of the grand jury at bench, the case law uniformly held that the grand jury selection 22 process was subject to constitutional challenge only if the defendant sustained the burden of 23 proving that there was a purposeful and intentional discrimination which resulted in a systematic 24 exclusion..." (Id. at 1074.) The Navarette Court interpreted authorities decided after 1973 as 25 imposing an affirmative duty to achieve a fair-cross section, irrespective of discriminatory intent, 26 (People v. Superior Court (Dean) (1974) 38 Cal.App.3d 966, 971-972 and Taylor v. Louisiana 27 (1975) 419 U.S. 522) but declined to apply these retroactively. It did not discuss the procedural 28

1 vehicle to be employed for a fair cross section attack, whether a motion to quash, a motion to 2 dismiss under 995, or some combination thereof.

3 The superior court does have jurisdiction on a motion to set aside an indictment, pursuant 4 to section 995, to determine whether the grand jury was properly selected, drawn, and impaneled.
5 Fitts v. Superior Court (1935) 4 Cal.2d 514. In Fitts, a Defendant brought, “certain motions by 6 which it was sought to quash and set aside the indictments” which were properly heard pretrial
7 pursuant to 995. The Court noted that, “no challenge is made to the panel or to the individual 8 members of the grand jury. Indeed, such a challenge is not permitted since the 1911 amendment
9 of section 995 of the Penal Code,” but with regard to the method of selection and empanelment 10 of the grand jury, “[t]here can be no dissent from the proposition that the respondent Superior
11 Court, acting upon the motions presented to it by the petitioners in the causes therein pending 12 against petitioners, had jurisdiction to determine, correctly or erroneously, on the evidence 13 before it, whether the grand jury had been properly selected, drawn and impaneled.” Fitts at 519.

14 Section 995 of the California Penal Code provides that an indictment may be set aside, 15 "Where it is not found, endorsed, and presented as prescribed in this code" or where the 16 defendant has been indicted without probable cause. Section 997 provides that such an 17 indictment may be set aside by the superior court, in an order that "directs that the case be 18 resubmitted to the same or another grand jury, or that an information be filed by the district 19 attorney..."

20 As noted, the superior court has jurisdiction on a motion to set aside an indictment to 21 determine whether the grand jury was properly selected, drawn and impaneled. Fitts v. Superior 22 Court (1935) 4 Cal.2d 514. However, "Mere irregularities, as distinguished from jurisdictional 23 defects, occurring in the formation of a grand jury will not justify a court declaring an indictment 24 a nullity. [Citations omitted.] The true distinction lies between the acts of a body having no 25 semblance of authority to act, and of a body which, though not strictly regular in its organization, 26 is, nevertheless, acting under a color of authority." Fitts at 521.

27 The question then arises whether a statutory fair cross section violation constitutes a mere 28 irregularity, or whether it may support a motion to set aside. Cases interpreting the federal

1 statutory grand jury scheme (28 U.S.C. section 1861) have held that the indictment may be 2 nullified where an irregularity in selection or empanelment interferes with the randomness or 3 objectivity of the selection process. "[T]he selection of volunteers from the jury pool has been 4 held to constitute a substantial violation because it introduces a nonrandom basis for selection 5 and a subjective criterion: willingness to serve. State courts similarly focus on whether the 6 deviation from the statutory procedures interfered with the randomness and objectivity of the 7 selection process, or produced a biased or prejudiced grand jury." 1 Beale, Grand Jury Law and 8 Practice, 3:10, p 3-41, citing United States v. Kennedy (5th Cir. 1977) 548 F.2d 1608.

9 Here we have a violation of California law, and the remedy should be found in California
10 law. In California, statutory irregularity in impaneling a grand jury will only justify setting aside 11 of the indictment if it results in an absence of "an essential jurisdictional fact." Fitts v. Superior 12 Court (1935) 4 Cal.2d 514; Bruner v. Superior Court (1891) 92 Cal. 239.

13 In Bruner, the California Supreme Court issued a writ of prohibition to prohibit the San 14 Francisco Superior Court from proceeding to trial on an indictment, because the grand jury was 15 composed in the absence of an essential jurisdictional fact. The presiding judge appointed an 16 "elisor" to gather a number of prospective jurors. There was no authority for such an 17 appointment absent incapacity of the sheriff. The methodology utilized for gathering potential 18 grand jurors was outside the then existing statutory framework for obtaining prospective grand 19 jurors. The Supreme Court found this error to be jurisdictional in nature, depriving the grand 20 jury of authority to act.

21 In Fitts v. Superior Court, the Court declined to issue a writ of prohibition where the 22 grand jury was lawfully drawn, and the irregularities did not rise to the level of jurisdictional 23 defects. As was explained in Justice Curtis' concurring opinion, "the members thereof were 24 regularly summoned into court, after their names had been drawn from the grand jury box, where 25 they had been deposited in pursuance of the law governing the selection and returning of grand 26 jurors. The jury, therefore, was lawfully drawn and all members thereof were eligible to act, 27 provided they met the qualifications fixed by law." Id. At 525 (citation omitted). The 28 irregularities complained of involved the manner in which the judges interviewed the summoned

1 jurors, in private, asking about matters unrelated to their qualifications, including their business
2 and fraternal connections and financial status. Assuming the claims that this was done in a 3 biased manner and in violation of statute to be true, there was no jurisdictional defect. The grand 4 jury was a de facto grand jury, and there was jurisdiction to proceed on the indictment.

5 In People v. Byrd (1954) 42 Cal.3d 200, a statutory violation was also insufficient to 6 support nullification of the indictment where one of the grand jurors on the panel had previously 7 served within a year and been discharged, rendering him incompetent to serve under section 199
8 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The irregularity did not amount to a jurisdictional defect 9 depriving the respondent court of power to proceed with a trial on the indictment. Id. At 206.

10 Under California statutory law after 1991, a criminal grand jury that is not drawn from a 11 fair cross section is jurisdictionally defective. The Legislature contemplated that an indictment 12 issued by a jury not composed from a cross section pool would undermine a conviction thereon.
13 The Senate Committee on Judiciary's report on AB 607, pursuant to which 904.6(e) was enacted, 14 is instructive. "This bill would bifurcate the institution of the grand jury into two forms, civil 15 and criminal...The civil grand jury would be authorized to inquire into county matters or return 16 accusations of misconduct by public officials in the manner such juries functioned prior to 17 Proposition 115 and pursuant to Hawkins; the criminal grand jury would be authorized to return
18 indictments for public offenses pursuant to Proposition 115. Individuals serving in the capacity 19 of criminal grand jurors, whether on an independent panel or a unified body bringing an 20 indictment in a criminal case, would be required to meet standards specified for criminal grand 21 jury service.... As noted supra, the existing selection process, involving judicial interview of 22 volunteers for competence and subsequent selection by drawing from the 'grand jury box', tends 23 to result in the empanelment of individuals who may not be especially representation [sic] of the 24 composition of the community at large. Thus, the composition of the grand jury bringing an 25 indictment may be challengeable upon appeal as to due process, failing to constitute a panel of 26 'peers.' To permit the creation of 'criminal' grand juries may afford the court an opportunity to 27 fashion a panel more representative of the general population, immunizing it from future 28 challenge and reducing the risk of successful appeal on a 'technicality.' "

1 The California Legislature has expressed its intent that random selection and compulsory 2 service be the principal means to achieve selection from a fair cross section, as manifested in the 3 first sentence of section 904.6(e). "It is the intent of the Legislature that all persons qualified for 4 jury service shall have an equal opportunity to be considered for service as criminal grand jurors 5 in the county in which they reside, and that they have an obligation to serve, when summoned for 6 that purpose." This court finds that the use of volunteer jurors, rather than compulsory service, 7 resulting in a grand jury pool that does not represent a fair cross section of the community, 8 amounts to an absence of an essential jurisdictional fact.

9 In supplemental briefing, Plaintiff asserted that if a statutory violation of Penal Code 10 section 904.6(e) is the basis for relief at all, it does not require automatic dismissal, but the 11 defendant must first demonstrate prejudice. There is no question that a showing of prejudice is 12 required for reversal of a conviction after trial based on a grand jury cross section violation; the 13 violation must have "deprived the defendant of a fair trial or otherwise resulted in actual 14 prejudice." People v. Corona (1989) 211 Cal.App.3d 529, 535.¹⁴ Here, however, we are faced 15 with a pretrial challenge. The Corona court specifically contemplated a pretrial cross-section 16 challenge without need for a showing of prejudice. "Any right to relief without a showing of 17 prejudice is limited to a pretrial challenge by extraordinary writ." People v. Corona at 535, citing 18 People v. Pompa-Ortiz (1980) 27 Cal.3d 519. In Pompa-Ortiz a trial court erred in denying a 19 995 motion to dismiss based on irregularities in the preliminary hearing that denied defendant a 20 substantial right. Defendant failed to seek review pretrial. After trial and conviction, he was 21 unable to obtain reversal based on the error, absent a showing of prejudice. "The presence of a 22 jurisdictional defect which would entitle a defendant to a writ of prohibition prior to trial does 23 not necessarily deprive a trial court of the legal power to try the case if prohibition is not 24 sought." Pompa-Ortiz 27 Cal.3d 519, 529.

26
27 ¹⁴ On appeal from a conviction, intentional discrimination in the selection of grand jurors renders 28 the conviction reversible per se. Vasquez v. Hillery (1986) 474 U.S. 254, Castaneda v. Partida, (1977) 430 U.S. 482. On appeal from a conviction, an unintentional violation of the fair cross section requirement requires reversal only on a showing of prejudice. People v. Corona, supra.

1 People v. Brown (1999) 75 Cal.App.4th 916, was also decided upon review following 2 conviction. In Brown, Defendant filed a motion to quash indictment on the basis that his grand 3 jury did not reflect a fair cross section of the community. He subsequently brought a 995 motion
4 to set aside the indictment on the same grounds. At a lengthy hearing, he did not establish a 5 traditional fair cross section violation (San Francisco used a criminal grand jury and his pool was 6 randomly selected by use of summons) but he did present evidence that selection criteria for the 7 position of foreperson resulted in exclusion of minorities. The trial court denied the motions, 8 and Defendant was convicted after bench trial, having waived jury. On review, the Court noted 9 that discriminatory selection of grand jury forepersons may give rise to a due process claim.
10 However, it affirmed the conviction finding substantial evidence to support the superior court's 11 conclusion that the claim of discrimination was rebutted. Here, Defendant does not seek 12 reversal of a conviction, and is making a pretrial challenge based on an underrepresentative 13 grand jury pool.

14 Plaintiff contends that a statutory violation should not justify relief under section 995. In 15 support, Plaintiff cites Ex Parte Ruef (1907) 150 Cal. 665, and People v. Rojas (1969) 2 16 Cal.App.3d 767, as examples of statutory violations regarding grand jury process that did not 17 entitle defendants to relief. Neither of these cases involved selection violations that resulted in 18 the absence of a jurisdictional fact. In Ex Parte Ruef, a juror was statutorily incompetent to 19 serve, because he had served and been discharged within the year prior to empanelment. The 20 particular statutory violation concerned an individual juror and could not support a motion to set 21 aside the indictment because it was not one of the six specified statutory grounds for challenging
22 an individual grand juror.¹⁵ In the instant case, the challenge is not to an individual juror's

24 ¹⁵ “The Penal Code enumerates the grounds upon which an indictment may be set aside. (Pen.
25 Code, sec. 995.) One of these grounds is ‘any ground which would have been good ground for 26 challenge -- to any individual grand juror.’ The Penal Code (sec. 896) provides for a challenge 27 to an individual grand juror for six specified grounds only. The particular incompetency here 28 relied on is not included. We think that the legislature, in declaring that persons who had been discharged as jurors within a year should not be competent, and at the same time denying to a defendant indicted by a grand jury including one or more such persons any remedy by way of motion or challenge, in effect provided that if the statutory rule prohibiting the service of such

1 competence. The challenge is to the manner in which the entire grand jury is gathered, selected 2 and constituted.

3 In People v. Rojas, supra, the violation of a statute prohibiting the presence of non-4 testifying witnesses during grand jury interrogation (Penal Code §939) did not warrant reversal
5 of a conviction, absent prejudice. Both Ruef and Rojas are examples of statutory irregularities 6 that did not amount to a jurisdictional defect depriving the court of power to proceed with a trial
7 on the indictment. Here, on the other hand, the use of volunteer jurors, rather than compulsory 8 service, has resulted in a grand jury pool that does not represent a fair cross section of the 9 community, and there is an absence of an essential jurisdictional fact.

10 As in Bruner, the statutory defect relates to the formation and composition of the grand 11 jury. “The court has jurisdiction to impanel a grand jury, but it has jurisdiction to impanel it only 12 in accordance with the provisions of law; and when it impanels it without the law; it is acting in 13 excess of its jurisdiction, and such a body is not a grand jury, for it does not fill the test
14 demanded by the section of the code...’Hence that which purports to be an indictment was no 15 indictment, and the party charged could not be put upon trial to answer. It should have been 16 quashed or set aside as a nullity.” Bruner, at pgs. 263-264, citing Doyle v. State 17 Ohio, 224.

17 18 IV Request for Judicial Notice

19 In opposing the motion to dismiss, the People requested that the court take judicial notice
20 of certain court filings. These documents contained statements made by the Jury 21 Commissioner and others responding to inquires in another matter. “A trial court may properly 22 take judicial notice of the records of any court of record of any state of the United States. (Evid.
23 Code. §452, subd. ... However, a court cannot take judicial notice of hearsay allegations as being 24 true, just because they are part of a court record or file. A court may take judicial notice of the 25 existence of each document in a court file, but can only take judicial notice of the truth of facts 26 asserted in documents such as orders, findings of fact and conclusions of law, and judgments.”

27
28 persons were not obeyed, the departure should not invalidate any indictment found.” Ex Parte

1 Day v. Sharpe (1975) 50 Cal.App.3d 904, 914. In considering the Motion to Dismiss, the court 2 has taken judicial notice of the existence of the documents as requested, but has not considered 3 their contents for the truth asserted therein. The People were permitted full opportunity to 4 present live testimony.

6 The court having reviewed the entire file and considered the testimony and evidence 7 presented and the legal argument of counsel, and good cause appearing therefore,

8 THIS COURT FINDS THAT

9 This state grand jury was subject to the guarantees found in the due process and equal 10 protection clauses of the 14th Amendment against intentional discrimination. Despite a finding of 11 statistically significant underrepresentation of women on the grand jury, the court finds an 12 absence of any discriminatory purpose in regard to such claims. The 14th Amendment challenge 13 therefore fails.

14 The 6th Amendment guarantee that trial juries will be made up of a fair cross section does 15 not apply to this state grand jury. California's statutory scheme does, however, require that any 16 grand jury that has the power to issue criminal indictments must be drawn from a fair cross 17 section of the community. Defendant's grand jury was underrepresentative of women, a 18 distinctive group whose representation was not fair and reasonable in relation to the number of 19 such persons in the community. This underrepresentation in the pool from which his jury was 20 drawn was due to systematic exclusion of the group in the jury selection process. There was no 21 statistically significant underrepresentation of Hispanics in the grand jury pool.

22 Although the exclusion of women was not purposeful, it was the result of an improper 23 feature of the jury-selection process in that a volunteer jury, drawn from a pool that did not 24 represent a fair cross section, was used to issue the indictment, without "meet[ing the] standards 25 specified for criminal grand jury service" as intended by the legislature. There was, as a result,

1 an absence of an essential jurisdictional fact related to the composition of the grand jury and the 2 indictment must be set aside.

4 THE COURT THEREFORE ORDERS THAT:

5 The People’s Request for Judicial Notice is GRANTED as to the existence of the 6 documents in the Ventura court’s file, but DENIED as to the factual assertions contained therein.

7 The Motion of Vincent Sanchez to Dismiss Grand Jury Indictment is GRANTED.
8 Pursuant to Penal Code Section 997 this court directs that the case either be resubmitted to a 9 grand jury composed in compliance with the cross section requirement provisions of 904.6(e) of 10 the Penal Code, or that an information be filed. As provided by Penal Code section 999, “An 11 order to set aside an indictment or information, as provided in this chapter, is no bar to a future 12 prosecution for the same offense.”

13 In the companion case of Schultz, the Court issued a similar order in which it did not 14 analyze or address the procedure to be followed by the District Attorney if it were to choose to 15 file an information rather than to resubmit to a properly constituted grand jury. The Schultz 16 order simply tracked the statutory language. Section 997 is unclear and susceptible to 17 misinterpretation in that it makes no reference to filing of a complaint upon an order of 18 resubmission. It provides that, “If the motion is granted, the court must order that the defendant, 19 if in custody, be discharged ... unless it directs that the case be resubmitted to the same or 20 another grand jury, or that an information be filed by the district attorney...” (Emphasis 21 supplied.) However, Article I, Section 14 of the California Constitution provides that, “Felonies 22 shall be prosecuted as provided by law, either by indictment or, after examination and 23 commitment by a magistrate, by information.” (Emphasis supplied) Penal Code §806 provides 24 further that “A proceeding for the examination before a magistrate of a person charged of a 25 felony must be commenced by written complaint under oath subscribed by the complaint and 26 filed with the magistrate.” (Emphasis supplied.) Neither Schultz nor Sanchez have been 27 previously examined or committed by magistrate. Section 997 permits an information to be 28 filed by the district attorney upon the court’s resubmission order, “...provided, that after such

1 order of resubmission the defendant may be examined before a magistrate, and discharged or 2 committed by him, as in other cases, if before indictment or information filed he has not been 3 examined and committed by a magistrate.” Where an information is set aside on the ground that 4 the defendant was not legally committed by a magistrate, the filing of another information by 5 order of the court without second examination is void. Ex parte Baker (1891) 88 Cal. 84.
6 Pursuant to Article I, Section 14 and Penal Code §806, the same appears to be true where an 7 indictment is set aside. Calif. Crim. Defense Practice §50.13[1][b]. Because Defendant Sanchez 8 was not previously examined and committed by a magistrate, the district attorney should, “as in 9 other cases,” proceed by filing a complaint, followed by preliminary examination, if it chooses to 10 proceed by information.
